PREFACE

FOR over sixty years CASSELL'S FRENCH-ENGLISH DICTIONARY has been in constant and ever-increasing use by both French and English students. During that long period there have been many revisions and new editions ; but, with the ending of the Great War and the beginning of a new order of things, when we and our nearest Continental neighbours are brought into an even closer commercial, political, and social contact than has ever previously been the case, it appeared to the publishers to be advisable to bring out an entirely new work that should be reset and remodelled from start to finish.

The present work is founded on CASSELL'S NEW FRENCH AND ENGLISH DICTIONARY that was edited by M. James Boëlle and revised (in 1905 and 1910) by Mr. de V. Payen-Payne ; and the aim of the Editor, Dr. Baker, has been to make the work thoroughly up-to-date in accordance with the methods of modern scholarship and lexicography, both from the point of view of vocabulary and pronunciation and that of general arrangement.

Vocabulary.

In a dictionary that cannot possibly include every word in two languages it is always a difficult matter to decide where to draw the line ; working rules are therefore drawn up, and it will be of interest to readers, and of value to them in their use of the book, if we give a conspectus of those governing word-selection in the present case.

As, in the first place, room had to be found for a very large number of additions, it was necessary—in addition to the saving of space effected by the new methods of grouping referred to below—to make certain omissions ; it was therefore decided that words appearing in former editions of CASSELL'S FRENCH-ENGLISH DICTIONARIES that had become obsolete by the seventeenth century should be removed, together with a few illiterate spellings and unnecessary variants, and some highly-specialized or technical words that could be of very little use to the general reader and student for whom this work is intended. These deletions, we should remark, affect the English-French section of the Dictionary to a greater extent than the French-English section, as, upon submitting this section to an exhaustive examination it was found that it included many compound words that are rarely, if ever, used, and a considerable number of words that are of merely dialectal or technical interest.

The additions made to each section consist of new or revived terms that have come into French and English use either directly through the War or owing to the initiation or popularization of developments in Art, Science, Commerce, Philosophy, etc. ; the more important slang, scientific, and technical words and phrases that are not given in previous editions of the DICTIONARY ; together with other words formerly omitted appearing in the more commonly read works of authors since and including the time of Molière, Bossuet, Fénelon, and Montesquieu in France, and of Shakespeare in England. Particular attention has been given to the large selection of idiomatic phrases included—a feature for which CASSELL'S FRENCH DICTIONARY has always been highly valued, and in the present volume the word under treatment has been repeated in every phrase instead of being merely indicated by a dash.

Pronunciation.

In the matter of the best method of showing the pronunciation of French and English words, as in other matters, it will be at once seen that the revised CASSELL'S FRENCH-ENGLISH DICTIONARY has moved with the times ; for, now that the study of phonetics is officially recognized by the Board of Education, the Scottish Education Department, and practically every educational and collegiate body in England and France, it follows as a matter of course that the new CASSELL'S FRENCH-ENGLISH DICTIONARY should give due prominence to this branch of lexicographical requirement. After careful and widespread inquiry into this question, and bearing in mind the fact that the best modern text-books dealing with foreign languages and with phonetics are agreed upon this matter, it was decided that the script designed and employed by the International Phonetic Association was by far the best for the purpose ; and we therefore, with the cordial permission of Paul Passy, D.-ès-L., Professor of Phonetics at the École des Hautes Études, Paris, and with the hearty co-operation of Mr. Daniel Jones, Reader in Phonetics at the University of London (who are joint-secretaries of the Association), have used that script throughout both sections of the present volume, and have by its means indicated the pronunciation of every main-word, whether French or English, and such subsidiary words or combinations whose divergence in pronunciation from that of the main-word is sufficiently marked to render this course advisable. A full key of the symbols employed will be found at pp. x and xi of this Introduction ; and here it will be sufficient to say that as our object has been to deal with the languages from a strictly practical point of view, we have adopted what is known as the broad transcription, that is to say, a transcription obtained by using the minimum number of symbols requisite for representing without ambiguity the sounds of the French and English languages. We should like, also, to take this opportunity of expressing our thanks to M. Passy and Mr. Daniel Jones, who have taken the greatest interest in the phonetic portion of the work, and the latter of whom kindly checked and passed for press the entire pronunciations of the French-English section.

General Arrangement and Typography.

The general arrangement of the DICTIONARY follows, so far as is possible in the case of a bilingual Dictionary of the present size and scope, the arrangement adopted in CASSELL'S NEW ENGLISH DICTIONARY. Here, as there, subsidiary words, participles, compounds, etc., are grouped under a main-word in all cases in which this could be done without impairing the utility of the work for the purposes of accurate and rapid reference and where no confusion could be caused by its adoption; when, in this system of grouping, a word is placed out of its strict alphabetical order, such word is cross-referenced from its true alphabetical place by means of SMALL CAPITALS within square brackets. The same method is adopted in all cases of cross-referencing.

Main-words are printed in heavy clarendon; subsidiary words in the same group in a lighter clarendon; parts of speech, abbreviations indicating to what particular science, trade, class, or subject the word or phrase belongs, and all French phrases (whether in the French-English or English-French section) in italics.

The asterisk (*) denotes that the word following it is obsolete; and the dagger (†)—used in the French-English section only—that the initial h of the word following is slightly aspirated and that there is no liaison or elision.

When two or more French equivalents of an English noun are given the gender of the last only is indicated when the preceding equivalent are of the same gender as the last; and when it is necessary to show feminines, plurals, irregular past and present participles, etc., these are given in small clarendon within round brackets immediately following the part of speech, the root being repeated.

In matters of spelling, hyphenation, capitalization, etc., the French Dictionary "Larousse Pour Tous" has been taken as the guide for French words, and CASSELL'S NEW ENGLISH DICTIONARY for English words.

Appendixes.

In the present edition of CASSELL'S FRENCH-ENGLISH DICTIONARY the pronouncing lists of Ancient and Modern Proper Names in History, Geography,

PREFACE

Mythology, etc., have been treated in one alphabet in each section instead of being split up, as in former editions, into separate lists of Personal and Geographical Names. It is felt that for quick reference and general utility this will be found to be an improvement; and in such cases as "Virginia," when the English word may be either a personal or a place name, and may not have the same French equivalent for each, the differentiation is clearly shown.

The Table of French Coins, Measures, and Weights reduced to English equivalents at p. 581 of Part I. is a revision of the Table appearing in previous editions of CASSELL'S FRENCH-ENGLISH DICTIONARY; the Tables for Conversion of French and English Weights and Measures, which supplements the foregoing at p. 582, is new to this edition, and is compiled from CASSELL'S POCKET READY RECKONER, by F. W. Dunn, B.A., B.Sc.

In conclusion, the Editor would like to express his thanks to the many friends and fellow-workers who have rendered him valuable services in many scientific and technical departments of his work; and to mention that besides the former editions of CASSELL'S FRENCH-ENGLISH DICTIONARY he is indebted to Beaujean and Littré, Larousse Pour Tous, the New English Dictionary (Oxford University Press), and—for the phonetic section of Part I. of the Dictionary—to the English translation by Mr. D. L. Savory and Mr. Daniel Jones of M. Paul Passy's "Sounds of the French Language" (Oxford University Press), as well as to Mr. Daniel Jones himself for personally reading the proofs of this section.

Consonants

CONSONANTS

The following consonants have their usual values in both sections of the Dictionary:—

b, d, f, h, k, l, m, n, p, r, s, t, v, w, z

“c” and “q” are not used for phonetic purposes: “y” is not used in the Eng.-Fr. section, and in the Fr.-Eng. section has a vowel sound as shown in list of French vowels.

g	as in Fr. dégager (dega'ze); Eng. game (geɪm).
j	„ „ Fr. rien (rjɛ); Eng. yellow ('jelou).
ŋ	„ „ Eng. bring (brɪŋ), finger ('fɪŋgə).
ʒ	„ „ Fr. agneau (a'no), soigner (swa'ne).
ɪ	„ „ Eng. bird (bəɪɹd), sailor ('seɪləɹ).
ʃ	„ „ Fr. charme (ʃarm); Eng. shield (ʃi:ld).
tʃ	„ „ Eng. cheese (tʃi:z), ditch (dɪtʃ).
θ	„ „ Eng. thin (θɪn), bath (bɑ:θ).
ð	„ „ Eng. thine (ðəɪn), bathe (beɪð).
ʒ	„ „ Fr. engager (əga'ze); Eng. vision ('vɪʒən).
dʒ	„ „ Eng. judge (dʒʌdʒ).
hw	„ „ Eng. when (hwen), nowhere ('nouhwɛə).
ɥ	„ „ Fr. huile (ɥil), Gargantua (gargɔ'tɥa).
x	„ „ Eng. ugh (ʌx); Sc. coronach ('kɔrənɔ:x); Germ. ach (a:x).

' denotes that the stress is on the following syllable.

ː denotes that the preceding vowel is long.

~ placed over a vowel-symbol shows that the vowel has a nasal sound, as in caneau (kū'kū), comte (kō:t).

ɹ placed below a consonant denotes that the consonant is syllabic, as in devilish (devɹɪʃ), flattening (flætɹɪŋ), muddler ('mʌdɹləɹ).

The aspiration of French words with initial “h” is indicated by means of a dagger (†).

An asterisk (*) indicates that the word or phrase following it is obsolete.

TABLE OF IRREGULAR AND DEFECTIVE VERBS.

THE Imperfect of the Indicative, the Conditional, the Imperative, and the Imperfect of the Subjunctive, are wanting in this Table. These four tenses are formed as follows :

The imperfect of the indicative is regularly formed from the present participle by changing ant into ais, as : parl-ant, je parl-ais ; finiss-ant, je finiss-ais, etc.

The conditional has always the same root as the future ; so that the first person of the future being known, it is easy to form the conditional, as : je parlerai, je parleras ; je finirai, je finirai.

The imperative is always regularly formed from the present of the indicative, by suppressing the pronouns, as : je parle, imperative, parle ; except in the verbs avoir, être, and savoir. The third person singular and plural of the imperative are always the same as in the present of the subjunctive, and belong to that tense.

The imperfect of the subjunctive is always regularly formed from the preterit indicative by adding se, etc., to the second person singular, as : tu parlais, que je parlasse ; tu finis, que je finisse ; tu repus, que je repusse ; tu vendis, que je vendisse.

FRENCH-ENGLISH DICTIONARY

A

A, a (a), n.m. The first letter in the alphabet of most of the languages derived from the Phœnician, including French and English. In French it has two sounds: (1) as in part, shown in this dictionary by 'a'; (2) as in pas, shown by 'a.' Il ne sait ni a ni b, he does not know B from a bull's foot, he is a perfect ignoramus; il n'a pas fait une pause d'a, he has not done a letter, a stroke; un homme marqué à l'a, the beau-ideal of a man, a first-class man.

a (a), 3rd sing. indic. [AVOIR].
(a), prep. [see also AU, AUX]. To, at, in, into, on, by, for, from, with, indicating (1) the indirect object of the verb, as in aller à Paris, to go to Paris; parler à quelqu'un, to speak to some one; ôter une bague à quelqu'un, to take a ring from some one; se soustraire aux poursuites de la justice, to escape from the law; rendre grâce à Dieu, to give thanks to God; arracher une dent à B., to draw one of B.'s teeth; condamner quelqu'un à la mort, to sentence some one to death; venir à rien, to come to nothing; aimer à la folie, to love to distraction; (2) the position of a thing, or the place where an action takes place, as in il demeure à Paris, he lives at Paris; il a une oughe au doigt, he has a ring on his finger; blessé à l'épaule, wounded in the shoulder; dos à dos, back to back; à portée, within reach; il demeure à vingt lieues d'ici, he lives twenty leagues off; à portée de canon, within cannon-shot; de vous à moi, between you and me, from you to me; de Paris à Rouen, from Paris to Rouen; (3) the time, moment, or period of an event, as in au lever du soleil, at sunrise; à l'aube du jour, at daybreak; arriver à temps, to arrive in time; à mon retour, on my return; à demain (god-by) till to-morrow; à jamais, for ever; (4) possession, as in cette montre est à mon frère, this watch is my brother's; il a une manière à lui, he has a manner all his own; (5) manner, method, instrument, as in s'habiller à la française, to dress after the French fashion; à l'instar de la capitale, after the manner of the capital; à mon avis, in my opinion; aller à pied, to go on foot; à l'œuvre on connaît l'ouvrier, the workman is known by his work; marcher à reculons, to walk backwards; se sauver à la nage, to escape by swimming; pêcher à la ligne, to fish with rod and line; (6) measure, weight, quantity, or price, as in vendre du vin à la bouteille, to sell wine by the bottle; dîner à trois francs par tête, to dine at three francs a head; (7) succession, order, as in en petit à petit, little by little; un à un, one by one; traduire mot à mot, to translate word for word, &c. literally; (8) description, kind, species, as in un homme à barbe blanche, a man with a white beard; une maison à pigeon, a gabled house; une voiture à quatre chevaux, a carriage and four; cane à sucre, sugar-cane; vache à lait, milch-cow; (9) between or about, when between two numerals, as in un homme de quarante à cinquante ans, a man between forty and fifty; il y a quatre à cinq lieues, it is about four or five leagues distant. (N.B. When speaking of things which cannot themselves be divided, or is used in place of à, as quatre ou cinq personnes, four or five persons.) (10) Before an infinitive, à indicates the sense of an adjective, or purpose, intention, etc., of a noun or verb, as in facile à savoir, easy to ascertain; un avis à suivre, an opinion worth following; un homme à récompenser ou à pendre, a man that deserves to be rewarded or hanged; machine à coudre, sewing-machine; donner à manger, to give (something) to eat.
